The South Side of Sevastopol.

Immense Defence. Preparations of the Russians—How they Work Under Fire—Communication with the Interior—Supplies and Reinforcements—The French Bombardment

SEVASTOPOL. Sept. 22.
The enemy persist in casting up formidable earthworks on the north side, and we look on as we did from September 17th till October 17th, 1854, and see them preparing their defences with the sure conviction that we shall be able to carry them, or sap up to them, or take them in some way or other in a year or two. Meantime, the weather comes in with a word of its own, and says to our deliberating Generals "Stop! as you have waited so long, I won't let you move now." It began to rain on the 19th soon after 12 o'clock, and the camp speedily looked as gloomy, black, and wretched as was its own during the winter. The wind always accompanies these heavy falls of rain in the Crimea, with rare exceptions, and so it blew to-day furiously.
The ground was rapidly turned into the well known Sevastopol paste, famous for its adhesive properties, never to be shaken or rubbed off by any amount of scrubbing; washing is the only operation by which it succumbs. Every one who is obliged to walk forth is hobbling about on two lumps of earth, with large lateral extensions, which form under his feet fasten to his shoes, and increase at every step. Now, it is quite impossible for field pieces to be moved under these circumstances; nor, indeed, could it be at all easy to handle cavalry, nor could infantry make any great progress in marching.

The proceedings of the Russians all day of 20th were inscrutable. They were assiduously busy in removing, by the means of military wagons and stone carts, large quantities of provisions and stores from the large magazine by the water's edge, which is nearly opposite to Fort Nicholas, and conveying them over the ridge towards the Belbek; but, as it is to demonstrate that these movements are by no means indicative of an intention to leave, they are forming a prodigious depot to the northeast of Sevastopol, in the direction of the Belbek also, and nearer from a strong earth-work deserving the name of a redoubt or fort. The piles of sacks and bags, stacked up in a pyramidal form, are plainly discernible with the naked eye, but it is not ascertained that the carts which are removing the stores from the north side unload at this new depot. On the contrary, it seems as if carts from the interior came down from Simpheropol, and deposited the stores at this locality, which must be somewhere here in the neighborhood of Kamischli. The carts from the north side, which are now apparently occupied in carrying away provisions, keep along the road which passes the chandel and winds along the top of the ridge near the sea, and when they descend that ridge they are lost to sight, and do not reappear. If they were going to the new depot they would keep far more to the right and take the road which is nearly parallel to the northern side of the roadstead of Sevastopol. These carts are to be seen not only at the great store house between Fort Catherine and Hollandia, but at the citadel and at Fort Constantine, and it would seem as if they came empty and went away heavily laden. The number of them is endless. They are not creaking lumbering arabas drawn by oxen, but light well appointed military carriages driven by soldiers, and excellently horsed, as is rendered so apparent by the speed with which they travel when a rocket or a bomb is pitched at them from the south side.

The large magazine which the enemy seems most solicitous to empty is a very spacious pile of buildings of dark gray stone, with small windows, and is not unlike a prison or penitentiary. The sides form a square, but we cannot ascertain what is in the yard in the centre. There is a quay before it, along which horses, carts and men rush at full speed whenever the French take it into their heads to annoy them. One gateway opens on the quay, and there is another on each of the remaining sides of the quadrangle, except that on the north. The buildings are two stories high, and are roofed with tiles, which are already beginning to look much tattered under the attentions of the French shells. Some distance behind the storehouse there are prodigious quantities of coal, piled to the height of a man or thereabouts, and intersected with walkor passages, through which we can see the soldiers going to and fro. The coals are symmetrically arranged in squares, and at one corner there is either a large weighing machine or small crane. As yet the Russians have not touched these coals. Further away, to the left, the enemy have a small arsenal or store of cannon and shot, which may possibly contain, however, several thousand guns.— In addition to the main stream of carts there are always many divergent currents and small streams of vehicles proceeding between various stations on the north side and Mackenzie's Farm, by different paths through the brushwood, and communicating with the detached camps spread all over the face of the cliffs between Inkermann and the Bel-bek.

At daybreak on the morning of the 22d, I saw through the mist on the Mackenzie ridge a numerous line of watch-fires, and later, in the early light, a strong column of the Russian infantry was visible in bivouac on our right of the telegraphic station, and to the left of the Spur Battery, near the Mackenzie road. Part of these have marched away again in the course of the day. The others remain in the same place, and are busy butting themselves, an operation which they perform with great skill and alacrity. They were encamped in a sort of chaparral, and they have already cleared a good bit of it, and connected the branches into the sides and coverings of their bivouac. Their arms were piled when they first came, but in three hours after the men arrived the gleaming barrels and bayonets had disappeared, and had possibly been placed in some dry and secure place.
The recent heavy rains will fill all the wells and swell the water courses of this district, and it will no longer be untenable by large bodies of men.

Having secured their right flank by the very formidable earthworks and batteries which we are permitting the enemy even yet to erect, in addition to their former defences and to their regular forts, the Russians will now no doubt direct the bulk of their army to protect their centre over the Tolmarnia, and their left flank over the Upper Belbek. They seem prepared to hold this extensive line, and we appear at present by no means prepared or willing to attack it. As the allies can scarcely spare men enough to send to Eupatoria, and thence to march on Simpheropol, or to force the Russian position on the Belbek by a corps descending on them from the north, and as there is no apparent intention of attacking them from Inkermann on the Upper Belbek. They seem prepared

tention of attacking them from Inkermann
to hold this extensive line, and we appear at present by no means prepared or will-
